The connection between workforce development and education has resonated in both the Fox Cities Chamber of Commerce’s Economic Development Study and the Community Life Study.

According to the economic study only 24.8% of 27 year olds have obtained a four year degree. What happened to the other 75.2%? How well did we prepare them to enter the workforce?

Bill Symonds, Harvard Graduate School of Education, released a study in 2011 called “Pathways to Prosperity: Meeting the Challenge of Preparing Young Americans for the 21st Century” in which they studied the connection between education and the workforce with an interest in finding a realistic path to employability.
